There's nothing funny about the price of a drink at a Hamptons club or the exorbitant price of a summer share, but that doesn't mean that these tony East End environs are totally humorless. For the third year in a row, the Hamptons Comedy Festival will host some of the funniest standup comedians and comedy filmmakers in this three-day charity event to fight cancer. (Technically, the show's in Sag Harbor, but we'll give it to 'em.)

With big-name sponsors HBO and Hamptons Magazine behind the fest, you can be sure that there will be a good amount of publicity surrounding this event (read: call early for reservations). Industry magnates will be in attendance to view some of the comedic up-and-comers (always good for lending a bit of anticipatory tension to the air), and more established acts will also take the stage with their best material. The show's promoters promise all-stars that have appeared on HBO, Comedy Central, Letterman and Conan O'Brien. The show's proceeds will be split between the Prostate Cancer Research Fund and the Breast and Ovarian Cancer Research Fund at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center. If you're curious about the next generation of comedy, call for more information and tickets. -- J. Gidman Zumpano
